About Hotels.

An agitation has lately been started for the building of more hotels of the larger class in this city, and has spread so as to have aroused considerable public sentiment. The building and destroying of large hotels is not a very probable nor desirable business for the people of a great city, and, as far as the building of new hotels in Philadelphia is concerned, it has been accompanied by the destruction of an equal or larger number of existing ones. We can recall the following having disappeared: Mansion House (south Third street,) Congress Hall, United States, Jones, Indian Queen, Tremont, Chestnut Street House, Black Bear (Fifth street,) City, and a long list of others that would not be remembered by a large portion of our readers. Many persons suppose that the facilities for travellers have been increased by the erection of the Continental, Girard, La Pierre, St. Cloud and other new houses. But this is an error. Although we have at present some thirty hotels scattered about the city, their aggregate accommodations are probably less than those of the hotels that existed before the erection of new ones began.

In New York the experience has been similar. We can remember many that disappeared simultaneously with the erection of new ones. But in our own city are not the new superior to the old? A few are, but the majority are not. Some of the old hotels were admirably situated in the business quarter and were large and well ordered. Some had grown famous, and a few were historical landmarks. John Randolph boarded at the City Hotel. The Mansion House was the headquarters of the Revolutionary times, and frequented by Washington and his court. Jones Hotel was for years the favorite of the south. At the United States Charles Dickens put up, and President Fillmore and his Cabinet all stopped and had a grand reception. Daniel Webster made the Washington House his headquarters on his frequent visits to Philadelphia. Congress Hall had fronts on both Chestnut and Third streets and was very convenient for the business of both streets, now there is no hotel at all on that part of Third street or anywhere near it, nor on Chestnut east of the American, nor on Fourth or Fifth. In fact, the American Hotel is the only one near the heavy trade, the apparent effort being to transfer the business quarter out toward Broad street.

It is a common assumption that all hotels should be splendid in architecture, sumptuous in furniture and luxurious in appointments. But this is a mistake. A great many travellers do not care a fig for all this and thousands are not in circumstances to afford such display. Of all who visit Europe probably full one-third do not lodge in the hotels at all. Especially is this the case in London and Paris, lodgings and apartments in both cities being abundant and free from many of the drawbacks of the hotels. A want of something like this has long been felt in America, and has led to the advocacy of cheap hotels, which in some cases would be an advantage. Washington city is full of lodging-houses, accessible to all, and quite as well known as the hotels.

But neither in New York nor Philadelphia does anything of the kind exist. It is possible that one or two grand hotels may be built to accommodate the visitors to the Centennial. But the mass will have to be provided for in other ways. And we suggest the plan in vogue in London, Paris and Washington, of converting many large existing dwellings into lodging-houses for transient visitors. This sort of property would pay a better interest on the investment than any other. It does in each of the three cities named. It has all the advantages of privacy and perfect freedom from conventional hotel usages and regulations. There is another consideration in this connection that ought not to be lost sight of. In London and Paris the hotels are permanent and in the course of a long series of years have acquired famous names all over the world. But the constant tearing down and building up that go on in New York and Philadelphia prevents anything from acquiring permanence or even celebrity. Somebody will be sure to start a project for tearing it down and building up something else. And it is as likely to be the Academy of Music, or the Continental Hotel as anything else. The old Academy of the Fine Arts has gone the voyage. Penn Square has disappeared. The Post-office is doomed. The Mercantile Library has shifted into a market-house. The Navy-yard has taken up its line of march to League Island. Camden and Amboy has ceased to be monaroh even of itself. Some "progressive" individual is perpetually trying to remove Philadelphia to Chester or Wilmington, or Delaware City, or Newcastle. Somebody else wants to abolish Fairmount Water-works, and go off to Perkiomen, the Lehigh or the Water Gap.

The new erections may be splendid, but they have not the historic value of the old; and we seem in America to be unwilling to learn the lesson that things and places become renowned by reason of continuance, since when they have that, history is constantly being made for them. The Centennial has a history; for, though comparatively recent, we may say of it that here President Lincoln and all the heroes, and warriors, and statesmen of the civil war have lodged, as well as the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh and other celebrities. But no new hotel can have this value. The lapse of years alone can give it. One misfortune of the perpetual change is that the splendor of the new structures attracts business from the old ones; and by thus rendering them unprofitable hastens their destruction. In ordinary times there is only a certain amount of transient business for the hotels, as has been proven by long experience; and in New York, as well as here, the erection of one new and splendid hotel generally involves the abandonment of another.—Philadelphia American.

Read the following testimonials to its merits:

New York, N.Y., 1873.
I have seen, and do most unqualifiedly approve of Mr. W. B. McClure's Anti-Friction Chain and Traveller, for the use of cart-horses, whereby the severe concussion and continual galling incident to the present mode of harnessing draft animals are effectually overcome. This invention should be speedily in general use.

HENRY BARON, President.
Alexandria, April 9, 1873.

I have been using for more than four months
the self-adjusting, Anti-friction Back Chain and Traveller, and take pleasure in testifying that they are a perfect success. The saving in wear of the saddle alone is worth more than the cost of the chain, and the saving in labor and suffering to the horse is incalculable.
